Note: With longer couches, placing the ButtKicker and mounting plate at one corner will mean that the person sitting on that end of the furniture may experience slightly more shake from the ButtKicker than those seated in the center and farthest away seats. This is normal and may vary according to the size, type and construction of your furniture.

- There may be enough free space under the furniture to hide the ButtKicker “inside” the furniture. You may have to remove dust cover to see if this space exists on your furniture.
- If there isn't enough space under the furniture, the ButtKicker will extend to the side or rear of the furniture. The mounting plate was designed to make this as unobtrusive as possible.

VERY IMPORTANT Using the Rubber Isolators Under Your Furniture's Other Legs:

The performance of your ButtKicker system will be greatly enhanced by using the included rubber isolator feet. This improvement is regardless of the surface the furniture rests on (hardwood, carpet, tile, etc).

- Start by putting one isolator under each corner leg and then use the rest of the isolators for any additional legs that are unsupported. The isolators can be placed under the legs without using screws.
- However, if possible, use the supplied screws to secure the isolators to the leg.
